PREFACE

AN alphabetical arrangement by the names of artists, or by schools where the artists are unknown, is followed in this book. In the attempt to solve the problem of numbering a rapidly growing collection of paintings, the experiment has been made here of adapting the C. A. Cutter system, long in use in libraries. To use the catalogue it is not necessary to be familiar with the system of numbering, but for those who may be interested an explanation follows. It consists of a combination of letters and numbers, composed of the initial letter of the author's name followed by numbers that represent the succeeding letters of the same, so that additional entries can be inserted without disturbing the sequence of the letters or the numerals. By this system the number, instead of being an arbitrary tag affixed to the picture, has a logical connection with it and its place in the catalogue, and the usual finding list is done away with. The plan has the advantage of being thoroughly logical and flexible, and the compilers of this catalogue believe that it will be considered an improvement over the prevailing methods, at least for the purpose of this collection.

The C. A. Cutter Two-Figure Author Table, which has been used in numbering this collection, calls for one letter for names beginning with a consonant (except S) and two for names beginning with vowels or S. Thus Ab1 is Abbey and R28 is Rembrandt. When it is necessary to make a close classification an additional number is used. Thus M61 is Millais, J. E.; M611 Miller, C. H.; M612 Miller, R. E.; M613 Millet, F. D.; M614 Millet, J. F. The number after the dash indicates the order of acquisition of works by an artist. Thus R28–1 is the first painting by Rembrandt acquired by the Museum; R28–2 is the second; and so on. Works lent begin with 51 after the dash. Thus, following the nine paintings by Stuart owned by the Museum come the Stuarts lent, which begin with St9–51. To indicate that a picture is the work of an unknown artist of a certain school, a capital S is added. Thus R28S is School of Rembrandt; Am3S is American School; the Italian School has been further subdivided to indicate particular sections of Italy; thus It5S is Italian School and It5S–F2 is Florentine, second picture acquired.

The gallery number, given immediately below the number of the picture, shows its location at the time of the publication of the catalogue. When no gallery number is given, it indicates that the painting is not on exhibition.

The information about each picture is arranged in three paragraphs:

1. Biographical note of the artist.

2. Title; biographical note if a portrait, or historical note if an event is depicted; description. The words right and left, when not otherwise stated, refer to the right and left of the spectator. Doubtful attributions and changes in attributions are noted; in the case of works lent to the Museum, the owner's attribution has generally been retained.

3. Height and width of the picture, without frame, given in inches; material on which it is painted; when not painted in oil, then the medium, such as water color or pastel; the signature in capitals or capitals and small capitals if the artist has written it thus, otherwise in capitals and small letters; reference to the monthly BULLETIN of the Metropolitan Museum of Art if the picture has been described or illustrated therein; the fund through which it was purchased or the name of the donor if it is a gift or a bequest; year of acquisition.

INTRODUCTION

THE beginning of the Museum's collection of pictures dates from 1871 when 174 paintings of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries became its property. These were bought the year previous in Europe by William T. Blodgett, a Trustee of the Museum, who held them until the Museum was able to make the purchase. One hundred of the number belonged to the Comte Cornit de Ways Ruart de Vanêch and were acquired in Brussels through Étienne Le Roy, the official expert of the Royal Museum of Belgium; fifteen others were acquired through M. Le Roy; and the remaining fifty-nine were purchased in Paris. Many excellent pictures were included in these collections: The Old Fiddler by van Ostade, Dutch Kermesse by Jan Steen, Drawing the Eel by S. Ruysdael, Hille Babbe by Frans Hals, three works by Tiepolo, and two by Guardi, to name only a few. A building at 681 Fifth Avenue was prepared for the exhibition of this collection, and, as stated in the first catalogue, published in 1872, the results led the Trustees to believe that their institution was permanently established upon a sure basis and would "become a most important agent in developing a taste and knowledge of art in this community."

The second great accretion of pictures, and the most important event in the history of the Department of Paintings, occurred in 1888 when Henry G. Marquand gave 53 pictures which placed the collection immediately in a position of considerable prominence. The Van Dycks, the three Hals, the Rembrandts, the Vermeer, the strange and beautiful work ascribed to Lucas van Leyden, the double portrait of the early Florentine school, the variant of Van Eyck's Madonna of the Fountain, Saltash by Turner, these and the others of the donation fix the Marquand gift among the most notable benefactions ever made to public collections. The effect of the gift on the growth of the Museum and on the development of culture in America has been incalculable. In commemoration of Mr. Marquand's services and munificence, Gallery 11 at the head of the great staircase was set apart in 1911 for the exhibition of distinguished paintings of any school, and was called by his name. Several of the pictures included in his gift are shown in the Marquand Gallery, but the quality of the works he gave, whether exhibited here or distributed in the other rooms, is the real reminder of his connoisseurship and generosity.

Other gifts were received. Cornelius Vanderbilt gave the fresco of Saint Christopher by Pollaiuolo in 1880; Junius S. Morgan, the large portraits of the Hon. Henry Fane and His Guardians by Reynolds in 1887; and in the same year the Catharine Lorillard Wolfe Bequest, consisting of a collection of 148 modern paintings and a fund for its maintenance and increase, became the property of the Museum. Her collection included pictures of worth and out of the Wolfe Fund have been bought many of the best modern pictures now shown—Turner's Whale Ship, Delacroix's L'Enlèvement de Rébecca, Corot's Sleep of Diana, and Renoir's Charpentier Family among the number.

Some pictures given in these early days were works in general favor at the moment, the popularity of which has not survived. Many of these are no longer on exhibition. They have performed their task in our genesis, however, giving pleasure to many for a number of years. Certain others, on the contrary, now numbered among the most precious, were not considered so highly at the time they were given. In this category are the two Hunting Scenes by Piero di Cosimo from Robert Gordon in 1875 and the Boy with a Sword and the Girl with a Parrot, both by Manet, which Erwin Davis (also the donor of the Jeanne d'Arc by Bastien Lepage) had the boldness and foresight to give as early as 1889.

The year 1893 marks the first participation of George A. Hearn in the growth of the collection. Thirteen years later he carried out the plan of a fund for the purchase of contemporary American paintings, increased since by the Arthur Hoppock Hearn Fund given by Mr. Hearn in memory of his son for the same purpose. With the advice and help of the donor, until his death in 1913, the income from these funds has already yielded 55 works, to which many more have been added by gift from Mr. Hearn. The collection of American art of to-day from this and other sources is the most complete branch of the collection and gives a wide representation of what is being done in our own country.

In 1913 the important bequest from Benjamin Altman was received. The collection, remarkable for the wide range of interest it embraces and the prominence of its contents, includes fifty-one pictures. Among these are Dutch paintings of the seventeenth century, thirteen by Rembrandt among them, as well as examples by Vermeer, Hals, and others; a very remarkable group of primitives, Memling, Botticelli, Mantegna, Antonello da Messina, Holbein being among the artists represented; and works by Velazquez, Giorgione, Titian, and Van Dyck. The collection according to the terms of the bequest must be exhibited as a whole; it has been temporarily installed in the five rooms to the right of the Marquand Gallery.

At all stages in the history of the collection valuable aid has been given by those who have lent pictures, notably J. Pierpont Morgan and George W. Vanderbilt. In 1902 the William H. Vanderbilt Collection, notable for the important examples of the Barbizon School that it contains, was lent by George W. Vanderbilt, and was exhibited from that time until 1920, when it was removed. Mr. Morgan, besides his gifts of Columbus by Sebastiano del Piombo, The Assumption of the Virgin by Benvenuto di Giovanni, The Argonauts by Pesellino, and many more, helped continually by lending works from his collection. With but few exceptions the pictures that he acquired after 1906 were shown in the Museum and many of them have never left its walls since their purchase by him. In 1916, his son, J. Pierpont Morgan, presented to the Museum the Virgin and Child Enthroned with Saints by Raphael, the so-called Colonna Madonna, which had been on exhibition in the Museum since his father lent it in 1912. In the following year the Museum received as gifts from Mr. Morgan all the pictures lent from his father's collection which were at that time in the Museum. This munificent gift consisted of works of various schools and included such masterpieces as the Visit to the Nursery by Metsu and the great Roger van der Weyden.

By the will of Hugo Reisinger the Museum received in 1914 a fund for the purchase of modern German art. In 1915 Maria de Witt Jesup bequeathed seventy-one pictures from the collection of her husband, Morris K. Jesup, and a fund for the maintenance and increase of the collection.

The regular buying of paintings began in 1905, after the receipt of the Rogers Fund, the first of the great bequests and gifts of money by which the Museum has been enriched. The Nativity by El Greco was the first painting bought out of this fund, which for four or five years was the single great source available for purchases without restrictions as regards schools. With the Hewitt Fund, 1908, and the Kennedy Fund, 1910, the possibilities were largely increased, the latter in particular being utilized conspicuously for the benefit of the painting collection. Many of the important purchases of the last seven years—Wolf and Fox Hunt by Rubens, Mars and Venus by Veronese, Three Miracles of Saint Zenobius by Botticelli, Meditation on the Passion by Carpaccio, Four Saints by Correggio, and others—are due to the Kennedy Fund. The purchases out of the Leland gift, 1912, are the Mouth of the Scheldt by Van de Cappelle and the Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes by Tintoretto.

While these funds are most frequently drawn upon for the purchase of paintings, the following are all available: Marquand Fund, 1894; Dodge Fund, 1899; Curtis Fund, 1901; Amelia B. Lazarus Fund, 1906; Avery Memorial Fund, 1907; Smith Fund, 1911; and Egleston Fund, 1912. Of these the Smith Fund is absolutely unrestricted, the others must be used to purchase works of art, and the Curtis Fund, by the terms of the gift, must be used to purchase paintings by old masters and those of the early English school. The Marquand gift is employed to increase the Marquand collection of old masters.

ST. NICHOLAS RESUSCITATING THREE YOUTHS. (It is related that during a famine St. Nicholas discovered that a certain man had stolen children and butchered them for food; going to the barrels where the human remains had been salted down, he made the sign of the cross and the three boys became whole and were restored to their parents.) A courtyard with an open porch at the left where the three boys are rising from the barrels while St. Nicholas stands before them; the parents kneel in the foreground. This is a companion piece to the previous panel, both being parts of the predella of an altarpiece painted in 1433 for the Church of San Niccolò at Parma.

B647–1 Gallery 33 ALTARPIECE DEDICATED TO SAINT ANDREW. Numerous panels with gold ground in an architectural setting. St. Andrew is seated in the center. In the panel above, the Madonna is enthroned with the Child on her lap; St. Catherine and Mary Magdalen are seated at her feet; two singing angels are at the right and at the left an angel is playing the harp. The upper left panel depicts the calling of St. Andrew; below, he is a witness to the wicked mother being killed by fire from heaven. In the lower right panel, the Saint witnesses a bishop being tempted by the devil in the form of a beautiful woman; above, St. Andrew is being bound to the cross. In the uprights separating the principal panels are eight small, single, full-length figures of holy men. The predella is divided into seven panels but the right-hand one is missing. The subjects beginning at the left are St. Andrew and the woman who prayed to Diana on behalf of her sister; the woman brings St. Andrew to her sister; St. Andrew drives away the demons in the form of dogs; the dead Christ, upheld by angels, stands in the tomb; St. Andrew raises the dead youth who has been strangled; and St. Andrew brings to life the four drowned men.

BOTTICELLI; real name Sandro Filipepi. Italian (Florentine); born 1447 or a few years earlier, at Florence; died there 1510. Apprenticed to a goldsmith, then studied painting with Fra Filippo Lippi and worked as assistant to Antonio and Piero Pollaiuolo. Called to Rome in 1481 by Pope Sixtus IV and executed frescoes in the Sistine Chapel.

B652–1 Gallery 30 THREE MIRACLES OF SAINT ZENOBIUS. (334–424; Zenobius was a wealthy Florentine who devoted his life to the Church and became bishop of Florence.) An open square in the city; at the left the Saint is stopped by a funeral procession and brings the body back to life. In the center the Saint, while on a journey, meets a party bringing relics of a martyr; the leader having fallen and been crushed to death is restored by the Saint. The story told at the right is in three scenes: St. Eugenius, while gravely ill, hears that a relative has died without receiving the last sacrament; St. Zenobius therefore takes blessed water and salt to the bedroom of St. Eugenius, who rises from his sick bed, crosses the square, and in the foreground is seen sprinkling the holy water over his relative who revives. There are three other panels of this series; two are in the Mond Collection in London and one in the Dresden Gallery. These panels were probably intended to decorate a chest containing clerical vestments in some church dedicated to St. Zenobius.

GIOVANNI DI PAOLO. Italian (Sienese); born about 1403 at Siena; died after 1482. Probably a pupil of Paolo di Giovanni Fei and a close follower of Sassetta; influenced by Fra Angelico.

G434–1 Gallery 31 SAINT MATTHEW AND SAINT FRANCIS. Part of an altarpiece. Two full-length figures, standing on a red carpet; St. Francis, at the right, wears a white habit and St. Matthew, at the left, has a yellow cloak over a blue robe.
H. 53⅝ in. W. 33⅝ in. Tempera on wood.
Gift of Frederic Coudert, 1888.

G434–2 Gallery 31 PARADISE. The picture represents newly arrived souls greeted by those in Paradise. On a hillside, men and women in fashionable Italian costumes of the fifteenth century and ecclesiastics in their robes, are being guided by angels toward the golden rays at the right, which evidently come from the Gate Beautiful. This picture closely resembles one panel of a predella, painted by Giovanni di Paolo in 1445, which is now in the Academy at Siena. The picture in the Museum appears to be a fragment; the other half probably represented condemned souls.

H161–1 Gallery 26 HILLE BABBE. (Hille Babbe, sometimes spelt Bobbe, was a fishmonger of Haarlem who was used several times as a model by various members of the Hals family.)

Life-size figure of an old woman, seen to the waist; she is seated and leans forward with her folded hands resting on the corner of a table; she wears a brown blouse, a soiled white collar, and a close-fitting white cap; a screech-owl stands upon her right shoulder. There are three examples of this subject: the one in the Kaiser Friedrich Museum, Berlin, very similar to the Museum's picture but with a mug on the table, is undoubtedly by Frans Hals the Elder; the other is in the Museum at Lille. Most authorities, including Bode and de Groot, consider the Museum's picture the work of some one close to Hals, probably Frans Hals the Younger; Moes lists all three under the elder Frans Hals.

H69S–1 Gallery 34 ARCHBISHOP CRANMER (?) (1489–1556; English prelate and Archbishop of Canterbury.) Life-size figure, standing back of a table; his hair and long forked beard are brownish gray; he wears a black gown trimmed with brown fur, and a three-cornered black hat. The table is covered with a green cloth and on it are an hour glass, a quill pen, a book, a sheet of inscribed paper, and a seal; a green brocaded curtain forms the background. It has been considered that the armorial bearings on the seal are those of Cranmer impaling the Episcopal arms of the See of Canterbury, but this can not be proved.

TUSCAN.

It5S–T1 Gallery 33 ST. GILES; MISSION OF THE APOSTLES; CHRIST TRIUMPHANT OVER SATAN. A polyptych. The right-hand panel shows a full-length standing figure of St. Giles, in the black habit of a Benedictine monk. The left half is divided into two sections; in the lower part, Christ is addressing the twelve apostles, and above Christ stands on clouds with angels, four of whom drive away devils. On scrolls are printed ISTI EST DOMINUS REX GLORIAE (This is the Lord, the King of Glory) and ET DOMINUS FIRTIS IN PROELIO (even the Lord mighty in battle). Berenson attributes this work to Tuscan origin; Fry considers that the types are non-Italian, though the painting shows Sienese influence; it was previously catalogued as early French, School of Avignon. Probably painted in the early part of the fifteenth century.

LIPPI, Fra Filippo. Italian; born 1406 (?) at Florence; died 1469. Pupil, perhaps, of Lorenzo Monaco, influenced by Masaccio and Fra Angelico. In his eighth year he was placed in the convent of the Carmelites, in whose church, soon after 1423, Masaccio was painting his renowned frescoes. When about twenty-five he left the convent so as to be free to practise his art. In 1454–65 he painted his great series of frescoes in the cathedral of Prato.

L661–1 Gallery 30 FOUR SAINTS. The four saints are—below, kneeling, St. Louis of Toulouse at left in pink cloak, white robe, and white and gold mitre; St. Benedict at right in gray-black habit, holding a book bound in red: standing, St. Augustine at left with a dark green cloak and white robe; and St. Francis at the right in a brown habit. The background is lavender and the floor is salmon-red. The painting has been much injured by damp and heat, only the central part about the heads of the two kneeling saints being in good condition. The head of St. Francis has quite disappeared. It was the right-hand panel of an unknown altarpiece and dates, according to Osvald Sirèn, from about 1460.

MAIGNAN, Albert. French; born 1846 at Beaumont-sur-Sarthe; died 1908 at Saint-Prix. Pupil of Luminais in Paris. Historical and allegorical subjects.

M28–1 L'ATTENTAT D'ANAGNI. (Boniface VIII, a native of Anagni, was elected Pope in 1294; Philip the Fair of France resisted his authority and compelled him to take refuge in his native town. The picture represents the moment when Boniface says to his assailants: "Here is my neck; here is my head; strike; but I will die Pope." Boniface was thrown into prison and, though liberated by the people of Anagni, died within a month.) The Pope in white robes stands in front of his throne at the top of a flight of red carpeted stairs; a few steps below, a knight who threatens him stands with his back toward the spectator; in the foreground at the foot of the steps are soldiers and populace.

Gift of Wallis and Son, 1883.

MAINARDI, Sebastiano de Bartolo. Italian; born about 1450 at San Gimignano; died 1513(?) probably in Florence. Pupil and assistant of his brother-in-law, Domenico Ghirlandaio.

M281–1 VIRGIN AND CHILD WITH ANGELS. The Virgin, Gallery wearing a red robe and blue cloak, is seated in the center
37 with head bowed and hands joined in adoration of the nude Child, who is seated on a red cushion on her right knee; He is supported by an angel in a violet robe and at the right an angel in a yellow robe stands with arms folded; back of the Madonna is a strip of red brocade and on each side are glimpses of landscape.
Circular; diameter, 38¾ in. Tempera on canvas, transferred from wood.
Bequest of Benjamin Altman, 1913.

MAÎTRE DE FLÉMALLE. ROBERT CAMPIN. Flemish; fifteenth century. His name comes from the fact that one of his works, now at the Städel Institute at Frankfort, was originally in the old Flemish Abbey of Flémalle; a contemporary of Jan Van Eyck, the founder of the school of Tournai.

M282–1 Gallery 34 VIRGIN AND CHILD WITH ANGELS. The Virgin stands in the apse of a Gothic church and suckles the Child; she wears a long white mantle over a blue tunic; on each side is an angel playing on a musical instrument. This composition is known as the Virgin of Salamanca; there are several replicas.

P431S–1 Gallery 33 SCENES FROM THE STORY OF THE ARGONAUTS. (The incidents of the story of Jason and the Argonauts appear in the Hesiodic poems.) These two panels formed parts of chests. At the left, Jason in his golden armor (by which he can be distinguished throughout the picture) bids farewell to King Peleas, the usurper of the throne of Iolcus; he is next seen with his horse at the foot of a stairway starting out to enlist companions; in the distance Orpheus and several horsemen are at the base of a jagged rock; to the right on the top of a flat rock, Orpheus, Jason, and another consult the centaur Chiron; the abduction of Hylas is shown at the extreme right and in the distance is the Argo with the P431S–2 Gallery 33 heroes on board. The second panel illustrates the doings of the Argonauts after their arrival in Colchis. Jason addresses King Æetes, who is seated on a dais supported on the backs of two white horses driven by a naked child; two women stand on the dais with the king, one of them being his daughter Medea; at the extreme right Jason kneels before the king in an upper porch of the palace while Medea looks on from a window; at the bottom of the steps Jason is shown with one foot in the stirrup and farther to the left he gallops across the drawbridge. In a circular enclosure in the center of the picture, the fleece hangs on a tree; at the right Jason is killing the dragon while Orpheus plays a viola; the fire-breathing oxen are yoked to a plough and the warriors, who have grown from the dragon's teeth, are killing one another; outside the enclosure is the white figure of Diana with her hounds and a scene of witchcraft.

PINTURICCHIO; real name Bernardino di Betto. Italian (Umbrian); born 1454 at Perugia; died 1513 at Siena. Pupil of Fiorenzo di Lorenzo. Influenced by Perugino with whom he collaborated in the Sistine Chapel; and also by Signorelli.

P651-1-22 Gallery 32 Twenty-two panels from the ceiling of the reception room of the Palazzo del Magnifico in Siena.
About the garland are four panels shaped somewhat like shields (each about H. 36 in., W. 43½ in.) with winged infants holding ribbons. Next to them are four panels of an oval shape but with the ends cut off: the Judgment of Paris (H. 24¾ in., W. 40¼ in.); a Figure on a Sea Horse (H. 24⅞ in., W. 39⅜ in.); the Hunt of the Calydonian Boar (H. 25 in., W. 41 in.); and Helle (?) (H. 24½ in., W. 39 in.). About these are eight panels of an axe-head shape: the Triumph of Mars (H. 31 in., W. 32 in.); the Triumph of Amphitrite (H. 30½ in., W. 28 in.); the Triumph of Alexander (H. 30⅜ in., W. 28¼ in.); the Triumph of Apollo (H. 31⅛ in., W. 30⅜ in.); Pluto and Proserpine (H. 31 in., W. 31¾ in.); the Triumph of Ceres (H. 31⅛ in., W. 30⅛ in.); the Triumph of Cybele (H. 30⅛ in., W. 28⅛ in.); the Triumph of a Warrior (H. 30⅛ in., W. 28⅛ in.).

In the corners are circular panels: the Three Graces (diameter, 19½ in.); Venus (diameter, 19½ in.); Jupiter and Antiope (diameter, 19⅜ in.); Bacchus and Silenus (diameter, 19⅜ in.). The squares of ornament surrounding these are original work.

Of the four lunette-shaped panels at the outer edge of the ceiling two represent the Rape of Europa (H. 17½ in., W. 41½ in.); and Hercules and Omphale (H. 17¼ in., W. 39 in.). The other two are missing.

The mouldings and ornamental reliefs are cast from the originals still in place.

Fresco on plaster transferred to canvas.

THE YOUTH OF SAINT GENEVIEVE. In the border is an inscription which, translated, is as follows: "In the year 429, St. Germain of Auxerre and St. Loup of Troyes, traveling to England to combat the heresies of Pelagius, arrive in the neighborhood of Nanterre. In the crowd that gathers to meet them, St. Germain distinguishes a child who he perceives is marked with the divine seal. He questions her and foretells to her parents the high destiny to which she is called. This child was Saint Genevieve, the patron saint of Paris." In the center panel the Saints meet the child Genevieve in the company of her parents and neighbors. At the left a boat with four sailors is close to the shore in the foreground and beyond people are carrying a sick man from a stone house in the hope that the Saint may heal him. In the right-hand panel a woman is milking a cow under a thatched shed in the foreground and beyond are country people, some of them holding the bishop's mules. These panels and the following are the studies for the mural decorations in the Pantheon, Paris. See Bulletin, 1916, p. 134.

Sa51–2 Gallery 31 KING SOLOMON AND THE QUEEN OF SHEBA. Panel divided into two parts by a border. At the left, in the city of Sheba, men are carrying boxes and bales and loading them upon camels while the Queen and her ladies oversee the packing; in the center of this part the retinue passes out of the city gates with, in the foreground, two white horses drawing a chariot in which the Queen is seated under a dais while before her are two trumpeters and four musicians; in another chariot and on foot are soldiers and attendants preceded by the camels guided by apes and negro boys perched on the bales. In the right-hand part the procession is entering the gates of Jerusalem. At the extreme right King Solomon stands in the loggia of his house and receives his guest; crowds look on from the square and balcony; landscape background. All wear costumes of the artist's time.

The border is in relief, gilded. At each side are armorial bearings; the shield at the left is blue with a bend, gold, between three gold vines, probably the device of the Luci family of Florence; that at the right is red with a counter-embattled fesse, likewise of gold, between three pairs of gold wheat ears, and belongs to the Sienese family of the Spannochi. At the base is the following inscription: QUESTA SIE LASTORIA QUANDO LAREINA SABA ANDO AUDIRE LA SAPIENTIA DELRE SALAMONE INGIERUSALEM. (This is the history [of the time] when the Queen of Sheba went to hear the wisdom of King Solomon in Jerusalem.) The panel was a decoration for furniture, probably a settle or marriage chest.

Purchase, 1871.

T44-2 Gallery 11 INVESTITURE OF BISHOP HAROLD AS DUKE OF FRANCONIA. (Emperor Frederick I [Barbarossa] conferred the Duchy of Franconia upon Bishop Harold de Hochheim in 1165. This picture is a study for a mural decoration in the Palace at Würtzburg, executed by Tiepolo in 1752.) The Emperor is seated on a throne beneath an archway; on the steps in front of him kneels the Bishop dressed in black; a page bears a red cloak and other insignia of ducal honors; at the right and left are soldiers, nobles, and ecclesiastics. Formerly erroneously called Triumph of Ferdinand III.

Purchase, 1871.

T44-5 Gallery 29 ALLEGORICAL SKETCH FOR A CEILING. Numerous figures are grouped with architectural features in sharp perspective against the sky. The picture represents the glorification of some maritime city, probably Genoa, as the coat of arms of that city appears near the central female figure who is attended by Justice, Fame, Force, and a kneeling knight who offers her his sword. There are various inscriptions whose reference to the subject is undetermined.

T49–1 Gallery 11 A DOGE IN PRAYER BEFORE THE REDEEMER. (Supposed to be Alvise Mocenigo, 1507–1577, who was elected Doge of Venice in 1570. This picture is a preliminary study for a mural painting in the Collegio of the Ducal Palace, Venice. It was owned at one time by John Ruskin.) The Doge, wearing a brown brocaded robe, kneels in an open porch facing toward the left, where the floating figure of Christ, clothed in light blue, is attended by child angels; at the right stand St. John the Baptist with the lamb, St. Augustine in a yellow cope, St. John the Evangelist in white with violet drapery, and St. Gregory with an open book on his knees; in the immediate foreground at the left, the lion of St. Mark crouches in the shadow; in the distance, between the columns of the porch, there is a view of the Piazzetta.

T49–2 Gallery 28 MIRACLE OF THE LOAVES AND FISHES. (See St. John, chapter VI, v. 11 and other references.) Christ, in a red robe and blue cloak, stands in the middle of the picture on high ground in front of a narrow stream; He is taking one of the five loaves from a boy and handing it to Saint Andrew; on the ground before Him is a platter with the two fishes. The picture is crowded with figures. Numerous ladies, richly dressed in red, orange, brown, or opalescent gray are seated in the foreground and on the hills at the right and left, fondling babies or helping old men. In the distance at the left a throng of people, in long white robes, stand as though awaiting the marvel. The same subject, though quite different in composition, was painted by Tintoretto in the Scuola di San Rocco, Venice.

T53–1 Gallery 37 FILIPPO ARCHINTO, BISHOP OF MILAN. (About 1500–1558; at first a lawyer, he entered the Church, was Governor of Rome for a time and legate to Venice 1554–1556, during which period this portrait may have been painted.) Life-size, seated figure, seen to the knees; his right arm rests on the arm of the chair and the middle finger of the left hand is held between the leaves of a red-bound breviary; he is bareheaded and has thin white hair and beard; he wears a dark red velvet cape over a white surplice. In the John G. Johnson Collection in Philadelphia there is a similar portrait, over a part of which a veil has been painted; Bernhard Berenson considers that the Altman picture is the earlier one by a few years.
